Released in February 2005.

A Brief Moment in Time is a collection of stories about events in the life of a child growing up in dustbowl Oklahoma during the Great Depression of the nineteen-thirties. These stories are told in sequence beginning when the child is only five years old to the last event which occurs after that child has grown to an adult and is just entering manhood during World War II.

Each story is told from the prospective of the child at the time in which the event is occurring. These stories are compelling and are told in a way that everyone can relate to regardless of when or where the reader may have grown up. Reading these stories will allow the reader to grow up again as the child in the stories is growing up. It will allow each and every reader to relive again, A Brief Moment in Time.
